

What's Next For THE INTERNATIONAL ACCOUNTABILITY PROJECT

The International Accountability Project's strategic planning process will guide and inform our ongoing work to reinforce community-led development through 2024. As part of this process, IAP engaged partners, board members, donors and supporters through feedback sessions and a survey to seek their input on IAP's programmatic activities and priorities. We invited more than 100 partners to provide feedback on IAP's priorities in a survey, with a majority of respondents comprising civil society organizations, community partners and peoples' movements. The key findings from the survey are summarized here:

What best describes you?

I am part of:

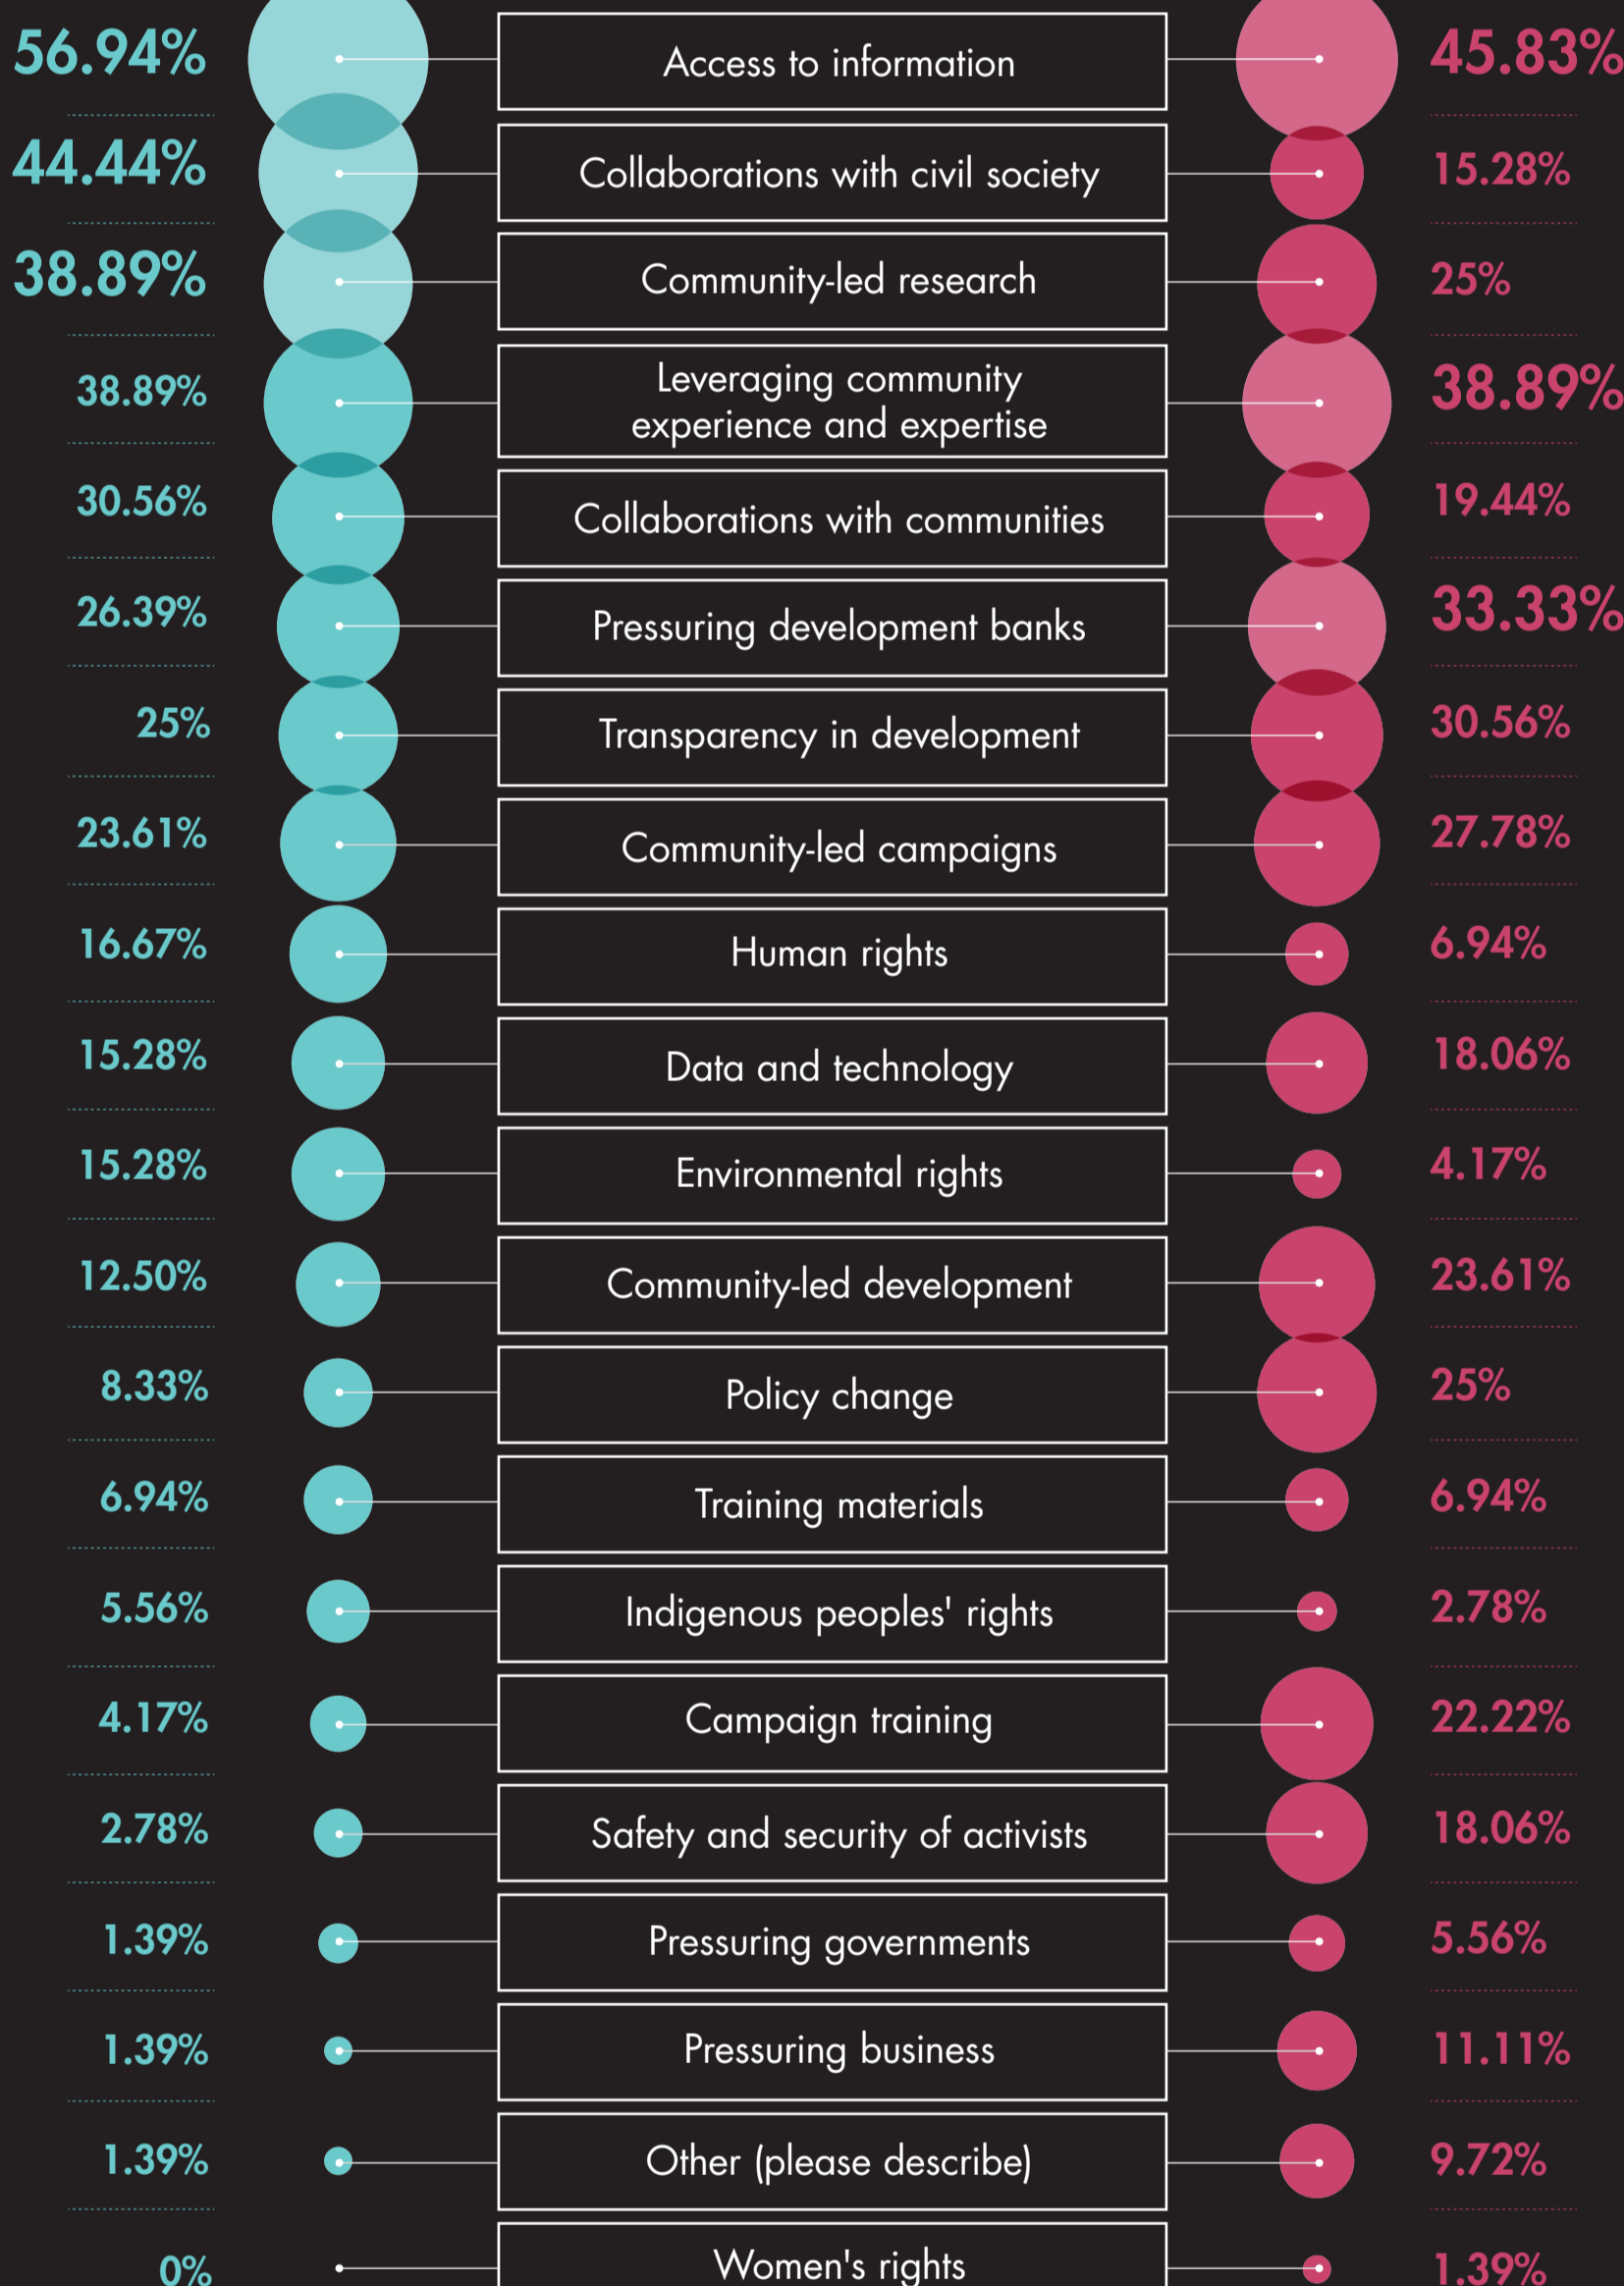

Who is IAP?

What does IAP do well?

In the next 5 years, what should IAP focus on?

Choose up to 4

What should IAP prioritize over the next 5 years?

- 1 Access to information
- 2 Leveraging community experience and expertise
- 3 Pressuring development banks
- 4 Transparency in development
- 5 Community-led campaigns
- 6 Community-led research
- 7 Policy change
- 8 Community-led development
- 9 Campaign training
- 10 Collaborations with communities

Comments

Our association with IAP was helpful in asserting the rights of communities. IAP should explore sustainable interventions with local organisations.

• Member of a Local Civil Society Organization

IAP should further look into the need to provide new narratives and amplify models of development based on community experiences.

• Member of a Regional Civil Society Organization

IAP is well positioned to be a leader in advocating for transparency and access to information in the development finance space, and to use community-led research as a pillar of that advocacy.

• Member of an International Civil Society Organization

I recommend community-led development because articulating (and IAP has been great at articulating this) we need to not only push back against negative impacts but create alternative development models, options, etc that are community-led.

• IAP Donor

IAP could help bring diverse experiences of communities and civil society to pioneer community-led development, and set an example that will inform policy change.

• IAP Board Member